The below is my account of a meeting with the mothers of the heroes and martyrs of Matagalpa in the northern area of Nicaragua. I was with ten others on a labour movement study tour of Nicaragua, November 1987. What I have written below is almost entirely in the words of the mothers themselves. I was taking notes at the meeting.

500 mothers in Matagalpa had organised themselves because so many young people have died trying to get a better life for the community. The meeting started with about 6 mothers present. When they heard we were in town many mothers came over to give us their testimonies. It was a very warm afternoon. The temperature was near the nineties.

They said that they must have peace but peace with justice. They were not going to give up. They said the contras destroy health centres, crops etc. A lot of hard work seems for nothing as so much gets destroyed but there is no turning back because they owe everything that they have gained to the people who have been killed.

They said a few days ago (October) the contra took advantage of the ceasefire and destroying buildings and crops and killed many. The situation is very tense for these people. I will now quote two testimonies from the many that we listened to.

Testimony My daughter fell January eith 5 others and 10 children in ambush. Aged 23 left 3 orphan children for grandmother (who is talking) to bring up, aged 6 months, 3 years and 6 years.

Poor have a right to everything, not like it was before the revolution. The USA doesn’t want this. Give money to the contra to come and kill us. To lose a child this way is to lose part of your life. Reagan will be punished for his crimes when he dies. Slogan is now "HERE NO ONE GIVES UP".

Testimony Mother told us of son aged 14 who when killed was a lieutenant in the Sandinista army. She said: he went to investigate a house which they thought was deserted and he was captured. Contra cut him to shreds.

Body returned to mother in pieces. Not recognisable when buried. Tried to find his clothes. Mother still cannot believe he is dead. She prays to God that these people who do these things will not survive because of what they are doing.

Her son had compassion for the people and she couldn’t stop him going to defend the revolution at such a young age. She said Ortega has gone all over the world for peace but all that Reagan offers is death and destruction. At this point the meeting became very traumatic. Mothers were breaking down and begging us to tell the world what is happening in their country.

It would be fair to say that everyone on the study tour found this meeting very emotional. Mothers were asking us to remember them for Christmas eve. For them the meaning of Christmas is very acute. Many, many mothers in Nicaragua will be grieving for lost ones at this time. They ask us to pray for them and to think of them at this time.

These mothers in Matagalpa are trying to build houses for those whose houses have been destroyed. Due to inflation the money is never enough. Also, of course, there are no materials (due to USA economic blockade) such as zinc, wiring, light sockets etc. They only had enough for 4 houses many more were needed. They have a sowing co-op but only 10 old sowing machines. They have hardly any tools to work the land with.

Final word from mothers - too many dead people for the revolution to fail. Struggle will continue until victory. Reagan should give contra money to the ‘outcasts in USA society. God will be the judge for these men who have brought so much destruction. They will have to answer to Him.
THE SEEDS OF WAR

The way of carrying on wars common in the world is so far distinguishable from the purity of Christ's religion that many scruple to join in them. Those who are so redeemed from the love of the world as to possess nothing in a selfish spirit have their "life hid with Christ in God," and he preserves them in resignedness, even in times of commotion.

As they possess nothing but what pertains to his family, anxious thoughts about wealth or dominion have little or nothing in them on which to work; and they learn contentment in being disposed of according to His will who, being omnipotent and always mindful of his children, causeth all things to work for their good; but when that spirit works which loves riches, and in its working gathers wealth and cleaves to customs which have their root in self-pleasing, whatever name it hath it still desires to defend the treasures thus gotten. This is like a chain in which the end of one link encloseth the end of another. The rising up of a desire to obtain wealth is the beginning; this desire being cherished, moves to action; and riches thus gotten please self; and while self has a life in them it desires to have them defended. Wealth is attended with power, by which bargains and proceedings contrary to universal righteousness are supported; and hence oppression, carried on with worldly policy and order, clothes itself with the name of justice and becomes like a seed of discord in the soul. And as a spirit which wanders from the pure habitation prevails, so the seeds of war swell and sprout and grow and become strong until much fruit is ripened. Then cometh the harvest spoken of by the prophet, which "is a heap in the day of grief and desperate sorrows." O that we who declare against wars, and acknowledge our trust to be in God only, may walk in the light, and therein examine our foundation and motives in holding great estates! May we look upon our treasures, the furniture of our houses, and our garments, and try whether the seeds of war have nourishment in these our possessions. Holding treasures in the self-pleasing spirit is a strong plant, the fruit whereof ripens fast. A day of outward distress is coming, and Divine love calls to prepare against it.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY THUGS

In the last week of September the IMF (International Monetary Fund) and World Bank had a series of meetings in West Berlin. Protests in response ranged from vigils to near-insurrection.

Speakers at the joint annual meeting tried pacifying speeches, aware of media attention and popular sentiment: a certain Mr Conable, president of the World Bank, said: "Poverty on today's scale prevents a billion people from having even minimally acceptable standards of living. To allow every fifth human being on our planet to suffer with an existence is a moral outrage." He added: "It is more: it is bad economics, a terrible waste of precious development resources. Poverty destroys lives, human dignity and economic potential." If all the people starve then you can't exploit them.

Basically, the World Bank and IMF pave the way for commercial banks and other assorted capitalists to rip off poorer countries. They set conditions on loans, such as public spending cuts and the abolition of subsidies. The countries in turn fall into vicious circles of loan repayment (or, rather, interest repayment), cash crops and internal "austerity." When all calculations are done, taking into account aid and loans, debt service payments, investment and returns, the bottom line is that in the last five years poor countries have sent $85 billion to the rich countries.

Protests in Berlin ranged from a big demo (estimates vary: 10000 - 50000), stink bombs, paint bombs and street theatre to bomb-threats, car-burning, looting and running battles. There were also demos in East Berlin, discussions in Churches and several successful escapes. On the whole the more violent protests caught the news, peace, church and ecological groups being keen to distance themselves from them. An alternative congress with radical third world economists was well attended.

Anarchists top union poll

John Hooper in Madrid

Spain's anarchists, whose forebears played a leading role in the strife of the 1930s, were yesterday celebrating their most important victory since the death of General Franco and the restoration of democracy more than 10 years ago.

Candiates representing the anarchist trades union movement, the National Workers' Confederation (CNT), topped the poll in elections to a committee representing more than 16,500 workers at one of Spain's largest industrial complexes, the SEAT plant in Barcelona's Zona Franca.

The surprise outcome, which was announced at the weekend, will give the anarchists 17 of the 53 seats on the committee — more than either the Socialist UGT or the Communist-led Workers' Commissions.

The CNT success in last Friday's vote was hailed by a spokesman as proof of "the resurgence of anarchosyndicalism." Until now, the anarchists have appeared to have no place in the modern, moderate and materialist society that has developed since the end of the dictatorship.

But the split among Spain's Communists now divided into three separate political parties — and increasing tensions within the UGT between supporters and opponents of the government's tough economic policies appear to have given the CNT the opening it was looking for.

Its emergence as the dominant force at this key SEAT plant is likely to cause some unease at Volkswagen, the West German vehicle manufacturer.

STAND BY IVAN TOMS!

Over the last few months there have been concerted attempts by the South African authorities to curb nonviolent resistance.

On July 25th, 25-year-old David Bruce became the second South African Conscientious Objector (CO) to be imprisoned this year for refusing to serve in the South African Defence Force (SADF). He received the maximum sentence of six years imprisonment. Speaking in court before being sentenced he said, "It is my understanding that the state does not protect people, and is seen by many black people as an enemy and an active oppressor of black people."

Bruce sees clear parallels between the South African situation and the persecution of Jews in Nazi Germany — his mother came to South Africa in 1939 as a Jewish refugee, and 12 members of his family were killed in the Holocaust. "Being aware of how European Jews — and in fact the entire people of Eastern Europe — suffered during the period of the Holocaust, I feel I have no choice but to set myself against those who choose the path of increasing racial intolerance and racial hatred."

Earlier this year in March Cape Town doctor Ivan Toms was sentenced to 21 months in jail for refusing to serve in the SADF. Gay activist, anti-apartheid campaigner and a committed Anglican his objections to military service are rooted in his deep religious and political beliefs.

Awaiting trial, Ivan Toms suffered an unremitting campaign of harassment — phone calls, pig shit, paint on his house and sabotage of his car. More recently, in jail, he has been sexually assaulted.

STOP APARTHEID WAR!

'I thought maybe I could do some good in the situation. But even as a doctor, which is probably the most helping profession, I found myself in a very compromised position. I was a cog in a machine that goes on to murder people in Namibia, attack in Angola and now is actually fighting in the townships,' he said in March 1985.

Both David and Ivan are just two ordinary men who the South African authorities have seen fit to ridicule, harass and imprison. All this against a backdrop of further curtailing the paths of protest: on the morning of 22nd August of this year, the South African Government issued a restriction order against the End Conscription Campaign (ECC), effectively banning it.

Crossroads June 1986: Troops lay down barbed wire to prevent squatters from returning to the site of their destroyed homes.
On July 1st Richard, myself and Sharon went down to Toronto to attend the International Anarchist Conference "A Survival Gathering" for a day. We stayed over and came back on Saturday afternoon. I think that on Friday there had to have been three hundred there and on Saturday at least five hundred. After calling myself an anarchist for twelve years I finally got to a gathering where there were more than a half dozen anarchists. I had a lot of strange feelings and emotions, rather I should say a kind of sensory overload, it was hard to tell what I was feeling. Firstly I missed the Christian Anarchist seminar I had gone for. It was on Friday morning. Still I did distribute some three hundred pamphlets and these were the only C/A papers I saw there. I also lost (distributed) a handful of Pinch of Salt mags. and a couple of Tolstoy's. The Catholic Worker folks were not there, mostly due to an imminent death at the house. I got rid of about a hundred back issues of Digger also.

Here is a list of feelings and thoughts after a few days:

Christian anarchists are very much on the fringe of the anarchist movement, not much awareness of comprehension of us by the movement. A lot to do on this. Obviously we are on the very fringe of the "Christian movement" as well. The anarchist movement is very alive, vibrant, imaginative and dedicated to change and social experimentation.

It was good to meet old friends some of whom I had not seen in years. But I felt that I could have walked into any of these people's homes from Vancouver to Melbourne and been totally at home and accepted.

A naked man sitting at a table makes no impression on hundreds of anarchists (not discernably at least).

It's unimportant if your hair is purple and silver, it's just cosmetic.

The Anarchist Survival Gathering proved to me beyond a shadow of doubt that big, complicated things can be done without hierarchy or bosses. Some eight hundred people came together from a dozen countries, and for four days, ran a nursery, a food service for all, 57 seminars in dozens of rooms in two buildings, showed movies, taught skills, and all without one boss, with no chain of command and with no pay!!

ANARCHY DOES WORK!!

The irrefutable, irrepressible, irreplaceable, irresistible, irrefutable, irredeemable "DIGGER AND CHRISTIAN ANARCHIST" is available from the aforementioned Kenny:

The ruling party in the NL's are the Christian Democrats. The secretary of the Dept. of "Justice" also is a Christian Democrat.

To make visible & known the injustice, and hoping to inspire the Secretary and her party to reflect contemplate on the meaning of the C in the CBA (name of the party),

And me I swam at night to the prison and painted:

"LOVE THE FOREIGNER AS YOURSELF - MOSES"
"TO PROCLAIM FREEDOM TO THE CAPTIVES - JESUS"

The next morning we gave a declaration to the police, mailed an open letter to the secretary and the Christian Democratic Party and friends dropped press releases at the offices of the media in the NL's. Like Auschwitz, many Dutch people say "Ich habe es nicht gewusst" (I didn't know) when they hear about this prison for foreigners. So now we're working on making it known and the next phase is to shut the prison.

We are thinking about a campaign of constantly and repeatedly blockading the bridge going to the prison-island. It is very likely one is locked up because s/he is a foreigner, I have to be locked up because this is injustice.

To fill the prisons with Dutch people. By suffering make the injustice visible and inspire society to create a more humane solution. But... these are only plans! So I'd better shut up and start working on realising them!
LET'S HEAR IT FOR THE ANARCHO-SYNDICALISTS

The number of "Pinch of Salt" readers in Sweden is now three. If they're at all representative of Sweden, then by now all the banks should have been demolished, all armament productions hammered to pieces, and windmills built all over the place. I've been keeping my eyes out / open/peeled (what blood-curdling metaphors), but the Daily Mail was just too hot on overseas news....

Maybe a piece on "Action Against the Banks" in next issue. A Ploughshares action has been attempted, against arms exports destined for India, but it seems they worked too long praying and missed the train whose cargo they were meant to bash. Better luck next time. In the meantime, let's hear it for the anarcho-syndicalists (piece lifted from WRI Newsletter No 221):

Lars Falkenberg was ordered to drive a train with weapons from Sweden to India last November (1987). As an anarcho-syndicalist he refused and, instead, blockaded the train with his friends in order to prevent others from driving it.

As a total resister he thinks it is important to look at conscientious objection in a wider context. The railway company kicked him out but Lars said: "My conscience is more important than my job." Charges have been brought against him for the action and the trial will take place this autumn. In a statement Lars said: "I did this action because all production and export of weapons contribute to the arms race. This is a threat against our world. Just as train-drivers on way to Auschwitz with Jews should have refused to drive, I refuse to participate in this madness."

KAIROS

KAIROS PLOWSHARES

In the early morning hours of June 26th, 1988, four peace activists approached the Trident submarine USS Pennsylvania on rubber rafts, intent on carrying out a symbolic act of disarmament. They were acting in the spirit of the Old Testament prophet Isaiah, "to beat swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks" when their rafts were discovered by security guards of the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics Corporation of Groton, Connecticut, where the USS Pennsylvania is docked.

The four - Sr.Kathleen Nairre, Jack Marth, Sr.Anne Montgomery, and Sr.Christine Mulready - called themselves The Kairos Plowshares, from the Greek word "kairos" meaning "the critical time", "the time when things might happen." Among the tools they had with them for the task were wooden mallets like those used in Nicaragua to tenderize meat, chosen now to demonstrate their opposition to US involvement there.

The four were turned over to Groton City Police, and held overnight. They were arraigned on charges of trespass, conspiracy to commit criminal mischief and criminal intent, and fined $40 for failure to use a light on their raft. They were released on a promise to appear for their trial, which was subsequently dismissed.

Undaunted, Sr.Kathleen Nairre and Sr.Anne Montgomery were arrested on August 1st inside the shipyard of General Dynamics/Electric Boat at Quonset Point, Rhode Island, after hammering and pouring their blood on components of a Trident II missile.

The women called their action Kairos Too and wrote in a statement: "We are two, but two who act in the spirit of the four Kairos Plowshares ... in that spirit we attempt to carry the "Plowshares Process" one step further: to continue to free ourselves from the paralyzing power of fear: fear of failure, fear of courts and prison, or, above all, fear of our own powerlessness in the face of the violence Trident represents..."

NUCLEAR NAVY PLOWSHARES SENTENCED

The Easter Sunday "Nuclear Navy Plowshares" (see "Pinch" no.10) were eventually sentenced after a variety of court appearances. On May 19th Magistrate Tommy Miller denied the four their international law defense and refused to allow any expert testimony. In one case the defendants turned their backs on the court and remained silent for the rest of the proceedings. Phil Berrigan, described by the prosecutor as a "career criminal" maintained his silence through sentencing. Court-room support throughout the appearances took various forms, from vigils to song; 40 supporters were ejected from Phil's sentencing when they tried to read out a statement.

When Greg Boertje was brought before court on July 22nd, he explained that he would remain silent because of the "court's complicity with death". The prosecutor described him as a "vandall", and the magistrate amplified this characterization to "juvenile vandal" before sentencing him to six months. The other sentences were supervised probation and community service for Sr.Margaret McKenna, and also for Andrew Lawrence, and six months for Phil Berrigan.

While the magistrate and prosecutor didn't ooze sympathy, the local community was reported as being "very warm and accepting". Even though Phil and Greg are now out, The Nuclear Navy Plowshares Support Group remains active and intends to do outreach work in the area.

We are an open network of European people who are deeply committed to spiritually based nonviolent action, and are inspired by the United States Plowshares movement.

We seek to share inspiration, information and ideas, perhaps even plan joint or simultaneous creative nonviolent actions.

We meet at least two times a year, and keep in touch via a newsletter, letter writing, national contacts, actions, visits and so on.

Reading a book by a liberation theologian about a year or so ago, I came across the following quotation, I presume from some atheist comrades to their Christian sisters and brothers, sitting both on gospel dynamite and the political fence:

"When you succeed in convincing all your abstract nouns for a few concrete ones whose meaning can be felt, perhaps it will make sense again for you to talk to us of Christ and God."

"When it is seen to be true, in a way that can be genuinely proclaimed, that Justice has "pitched its tent in our midst", and that Love has "dwelt amongst us", then perhaps what your Bible calls the "name of God" can make itself known.

And so it is that "Pinch of Salt" reaches its third birthday, and it seems like a good time for "Pinch of Salt" renderers to stop and think: what’s the point? Does "Pinch of Salt" rush past eyes like some television clippings of super-human deeds, which leave us glued to our seats? Entertainment value aside, do the pages inspire us into arm-chair awe or conspiracy-breathing together? Cause these kinds of change, this Spirit of Freedom, are for all. To up and act. To pitch the tent of Justice, to get involved in the thick of it, and to reflect, and learn, and act again.

"Pinch" covers a lot of anti-nuclear and anti-military stuff, some people may think too much; but, an Ian Harrison made clear in the summer school I attended in July - the Bomb is both a fact and a metaphor. People begin where they are, unravel a thread, touching one, finding more. The Bomb brings our hearts and lives to a crucial focus: as Thomas Merton suggested, the end of the world will be legal. "Pinch" tries to throw out material to aid our internal combustion engines of hope and action, in our struggles against the state and all forms of violence, and our visions and attempts at other ways, I sometimes get the feeling, though, that the glue sticking us to our armchairs in front of our television sets never quite vaporises into freedom. As Jesus might well say, were he a skateboard punk rocker: Go for it, as God does....smash the TV, extricate yourself from your comfortable chair.....then perhaps what your Bible calls the "name of God" can make itself known.

So ran the consensus after a four day gathering at Carl Kabat Haus in Mutlangen, home of Pershing missiles (Mutlangen that is, not Carl Kabat Haus), and scene of the two German Plowshares actions.

Having hitched down in the midst of US troop exercises, spent a night in a concrete pipe by the autobahn with tanks thundering by, I arrived feeling like some underground resistor in an occupied country (which, in a manner of speaking, is what I was). Eighteen of us, including one very little one and one on the way, spent four days of talking, eating, walking, meditating, singing, vigiling at the base, befriending, reminiscing, planning, and generally conspiring. We were from England, Sweden, the Netherlands, West Germany and the states. Several had taken place in plowshares actions - in the US, Germany and Sweden, and everyone admitted to great inspiration from these and similar actions.

The upshot of it all: a good cross-fertilisation of ideas, and plans afoot for simultaneous actions; a newsletter out in a month or so; another gathering in April in Hamburg; and a very re-energised me.

IIIrd BIRTHDAY POLEMIC

This Paper is sponsored by LETTER FROM WINSON GREEN

In response to my article about my week in Winson Green Prison (see "Pinch" no.9), a friend, Ann, wrote a letter of complaint. She didn't mention me by name in the letter, but mentioned:

my being hit for refusing to give my date of birth prisoner I met severely beaten up after getting a cup of tea at the wrong time my difficulty in getting a vegan diet (I didn't get anything to eat the whole six and a half days - plus was variously threatened with single cell, punishment block and even the psychiatric wing)
the sex-fantasy-murder-film ("Five minutes to midnight" I think) which was our weekly "treat"

The below letter is the response she got from a senior officer. Having experienced his prison, it is a truly amazing letter - on one level very funny, on another very chilling: things like "no violence to inmates takes place". Either he hasn't got a clue, or it's the official arrogance of what he might call a "professional liar." But the public image view, and, indeed, the public awareness of life in prison, means that letters like this can be smugly sent to members of the public, and that's that.

Dear Miss Adams,

Thankyou for your letter of August 17 to the Governor. As I am responsible for inmate film selection I am replying to your spurious comments and, indeed, allegations regarding inmates treatment in this establishment.

Firstly can I say I have checked our records here, and with the Independent Board of Visitors, and no complaints of assault or brutality have been lodged relating to the allegations you make.

I have no idea who your friend was who you suggest was in our custody but he has misled you completely, which is something which we are quite accustomed to here.

Had he required a special diet he has only to apply to his wing manager of which I'm one with 19 years here.

A vegan diet is different in as much as we don't accept inmates are vegans unless that fact is confirmed by the Vegan Society, George street, Oxford. Public letters are freely issued to men to write there. We have no bias here relating to anything including diet, it is irrelevant to us. I myself am a vegetarian.

We are required by law to restrain violent and mentally ill patients that, unfortunately, courts burden us with repeatedly, no violence to inmates takes place, if it did and a complaint made, the police would be called in to investigate, as they normally would a section 20 or 47 assault taking place anywhere.

You have to accept that prisons are full of professional liars. Some lie their way through life living, as Sigmund Freud describes, as "Parapraxes", imaginations to relieve an otherwise mundane life, which we all experience from time to time.

The record of films shown here of late records the following:

- Beverley Hills Cop (17/7)
- Crocodile Dundee (24/7)
- Lethal Weapon (30/7)
- Missing in Action (6/8)
- The Godfather (15/8)
- Top Gun (20/8)

Many of these films are suitable for children outside and your perception of how much effect films have on the audience does Mary Whitehouse credit. There is little evidence to support your views. These men receive little all week because we are bombaraded by Courts and Mental Hospitals to accept 1200 men when we can only cater for 560 lawfully.

A good film to relieve boredom is all they get. Do you seriously suggest I put on "Mary Poppins" to hardened criminals, it has been tried and they all walked out, causing us problems we don't need.

They need entertaining and these films fill that criteria. Of course they like action and "non blue" sex scenes, they are normal men and are sexually attracted to women, what's unusual about that? None of these men are sex offenders.

Running a potentially dangerous prison is done with all co-operating and done with psychology. I don't suppose you've ever been to prison, let alone have any factual experience to support your theoretical comments. An old axiom in life goes - "there is no sadder sight in this world than to see a beautiful theory crushed by brutal fact" - unfortunately prisons are full of "brutal facts", if you had any experience of them you would realise.

I hope I have answered your queries to your satisfaction and extinguished your groundless fears about inmates' safety.

Michael Kelly (Senior Officer) H.M.Prison. Birmingham.

THE RAVEN'S DREAM

Give me a time when no-one was hurt
Or frozen by a stare
Give me a place where never was seen
A soul belittled there
Give me a heart which no-one could break
Or even a peaceful mind
Give me a life where ever was thought
No troubles there to find
Give me then a morning sun
Which somehow lasts a day
And last of all give me a love
Which cannot fade away
Dan Berrigan: So, what are we going to talk about. Where did you get this funny machine?

Stephen: I met some friends at the meeting last night. Well, I'd like to know if you've noticed any major differences between the U.S. and British Christian Peace Movement. I'm particularly thinking about when you talk about the need for community, which is something that comes very much from the Christian experience in the States. There's not so much of that here. It's like there's more maturity in the movement in the States. It's as if in Britain it's ten or fifteen years behind. In that sort of collective power. I don't know if you picked any of that up, or is that just romanticism?

Dan: Well, it's hard for me to make comparisons, you know, on such a brief visit. But I think that whatever we've been able to do by way of community has come out of the Catholic Worker and that tradition, which is now, oh, fifty years old. About the crucial business of living together in order to do this work, and of being together in favour of the poor in order to do peace work.

I think Dorothy drew those conclusions at a time when the Church was just ready for someone like her, even though for a number of years she felt very alone. She was immediately swamped with a tremendous response to her paper, and an immediate response to her call, you know, to community and peacemaking. That went up and down like a fever chart over the years, but it never stopped, and at the time of her death and since then there are more Catholic Worker houses than ever. So she tapped something very deep in us, and even people who never lived in the Worker, like myself - I never lived in the Worker - we learned from it, our communities benefited from it, and we got into peacemaking because of it. So it was a very powerful gift, the example that she gave us, and we never deserved that, and it wouldn't have happened without her.

So, what else?

Stephen: I'd like to ask about the Plowshares Actions: you talk a lot about preparing - that's all tied in with a sense of community isn't it? The way people meet each other, is that just through friendships, connections......

Dan: Yeah, these connections have really been going on for many years, and go back even to the Civil Rights days, you know, and certainly to the Vietnam War days; and the fact that in this huge territory, just say up and down the East Coast where I live, people have known one another for years, and twice a year we gather for retreats, and then there are all sorts of local meetings going on all the time - local scriptural study, local eucharists, local work with the poor, local work with AIDS, local work with the homeless, anti-nuclear work...And so when we came together in 1980 to talk about Plowshares, I could look around that group and know everybody, and there was an immediate sense of trust of everybody. We began with a very powerful common basis of faith and in the way we live, and a certain openness towards this project, which was then very shocking and new. But, everybody didn't know everybody, most people knew most people, and it crossed around like that.

Derek: Can you say something about the abortion issue as regards direct action at abortion clinics? Do you see that as likened to direct action against nuclear weapons, or is that a separate issue?

Dan: Oh, it's all one. We're friends with all these people who call themselves Pro-lifers for Survival: they're all anti-abortionist and anti-war and anti-capital punishment, and everyone is in that one aspect or another. And they've been holding these massively sit-ins at these abortion clinics lately, and, you know, anti-nuclear people are there - all sorts of people are there; and it's not this business about you know, pro-life translated as anti-abortion and pro-war, which we've had in many of the groups - it's a better, integrated view of the whole range of life - a willingness to speak up for all of that.

Stephen: Christian activists tend to be people who are into symbols, which I think give a really strong identity and are a great source of strength; but do you get much feedback from symbols like blood and... hammers - what do they mean to people who aren't soaked in the Christian culture?

Dan: Oh sure, yeah...there's no end of debate about all that on secular and religious territory, you know; and people who are not particularly religious and people who are religious are really quite shocked by this. When, let's say, when we first went into draft-boards in '68, even '67, people like Dorothy Day and Thomas Merton and others were really quite shocked, because the nonviolence movement had never taken itself into these places before to do physical damage, you know. And Merton was very shaken, and there were all sorts of bad reports with us about that. He left, of course, for Thailand soon after and died in '68. But Dorothy put it this way in the papers: she said that it was not the Catholic Worker way, as she understood it, but she was supporting it because it was nonviolent. But she had qualms about it: it was very new, it hadn't been done before. The Catholic Worker had always done civil disobedience, but they hadn't gone to any of these places to do physical damage: we started that. And it's still a source of contention. Some people dropped out because of the hammers, saying, Oh God, that's a symbol of violence, and all that. Well, you know, sorry - it all has to be talked about.

In one or two places they used mechanical hammers, like that group of Helen Woodson and Carl Kabat and all, and I had great difficulty with that, but I wasn't dictating to them, they were on their own. They used those jack-hammers, you know, ooh, we're getting a little bit close to damage at the expense of symbols. I wouldn't advocate that. So, there you are. The debate goes on.

Derek: With regards to national liberation movements: I read your letter to Ernesto Cardenal, and Cardenal's reply. I don't know if you can remember it: can you say a little bit more about that, as regards Nicaragua today.

Dan: Yeah. I don't know if there's anything more to say. I refuse to go on indefinitely in print, you know, as if this was becoming some sort of a personal vendetta or something like that. Strangely enough, I have a great deal more respect and support with Cardenal's brother, Fernando, who, as you know, is the Minister of Education and in charge of the Literacy Campaign down there, which is very successful. And then he was kicked out of the jesuits because he wouldn't leave his office. But I find him much more thoughtful on these questions.

Derek: I think Ernesto would claim that he had been proven correct in the light of events. He couldn't answer you at the time - I think he said that in his letter: but, the light of events would show that violence has a place in the struggle.?

Dan: It's interesting down there that the Foreign Minister, who is also a priest, has gotten very uneasy about armed struggle and about that as the way and the only way that we can do this, and so on. And, as you know, he's done these long pilgrimages and these long fasts, and these fasts on pilgrimages and all that, and I think, though I haven't been down there during those things, but it seems to me that he thinks that these nonviolent alternatives are extremely important, both for him personally and for the people: that they give people hope that they wouldn't get otherwise; and that they awaken a great deal of compassion and sense of the future, and all that - the armed struggle is just sort of killing, you know. So, I don't know. I find these directions more hopeful. And I think in those situations, as well as in ours, we have to keep seeking ways of bringing hope, you know. But I'm not sure that guns do that - at least over a long period.

Stephen: One of the things - the creativity and imagery and symbolism of nonviolent action - is something, I think, Christians have really got to offer.

Dan: Yeah, there's something about, you know, the political imagination that can awaken these symbols when political imagination is absolutely dead at the time: you know, the use of the liturgical year, the use of the symbols of the earth, the bringing of the sacraments into these places, the use of exorcisms and prayer and street drama and all these things are very very powerful. And then this business of the text of Isaiah that led to a whole series of actions, and so on and so forth.

Stephen: Your position towards the state and your various acts of rebellion: obviously they're gone into with a lot of preparation. Do you find that spirit of protest and dissent something that comes easily, or do you have to swallow it with some reticence?

Dan: Oh, it's very hard, oh sure. You know, it's easier to do these things where you realise that you're going to be out of jail in a few days, but this whole question of Plowshares is a very, very big item. One would be foolish to enter into it lightly. One has to go through rather a dark night in order to come out and say "yes" in a way that is not destructive of oneself. And that's why we always urge this long period of careful preparation. Even with that, you know, we've had people (we haven't, thank God, had anyone seriously injured, even psychologically) - well, you get 85 people taking part or something and a few people are going to show a weakness somewhere later. Like, people will find that jail is a different reality than they thought. Sometimes it seems to come down to people who have never really lived in community, and they just have to get out from under this.

Stephen: Someone like Helen Woodson seems to go from strength to strength. It's like, you read her writings and there seems to be a real progression from within prison, a radicalisation, constantly throwing out new realisations and actions.

Dan: Yup. And then they just have to keep transferring her: they don't know what to do with that woman.

Derek: Have you had any luck in getting to see the Birmingham Six?

Dan: Oh yeah, Well, there will be just be two of them that I'll see in the morning. That's good news. I wish I could see all six of them. But they've scattered them, haven't they? I've been corresponding with them, but I haven't really met them yet. So, we'll see.

How was that. Alright?

SUPPORT THE PEACE CAMPS

FASLANE FOCUS

Monday morning, 10th October, putting the final touches to this issue, and a man comes on the radio...saying "last night four people got into the Polaris base......

...three over the fence and one swam the Loch" and I think "bless em" and am reminded to give Faslane Peace Camp the mention it deserves: numbers have dwindled there a bit, but it seems things are picking up, and it's vital they get lots of support, what with Trident on its way and all that. Who knows, maybe you should go and live there. I mean, have you asked yourself if you've got a vocation to peacecamphood?

Faslane Peace Camp, Shandon, HEILNSBURGH, Dumbartonshire, Scotland

and have just received the newsletter from Upper Heyford Peace Camp. Sure they'd welcome support as well. An with peace, there is eternal space, though write first: Upper Heyford Peace Camp, Postbox: Camp Road, Upper Heyford, Oxon

John, who lives there, writes "You are welcome anytime".

WHERE THE LETTERS?

O.K. So there aren't any letters in this issue. I wonder why not. No, it's not some censorial conspiracy. Last issue's onslaught was too good to be true, and since then we've received lots of scrawls and enquiries but nothing coherent of interesting enough to grace the pages of this graceful magazine. Co in, put pen to paper, fingers to keyboard, vocal chords to diaphone, chisel to slabs of rock, and reach the world with your views/hang-ups/irritations &.

N.B. We now have a new address.

THE INEVITABLE JAMIE

"The assault on Culture- Utopian currents from Lettrisme to Class War", by Stewart Home. Aporia Press & Unpopular Books 1988

This is a fascinating work of cultural studies. The various art/political movements examined are all angry young or otherwise angry people enraged at some aspect of being conventional. This emotional drive is converted into a sometimes vague intellectual response and then actions which many people find incomprehensible. For example: "The PROVO's became notorious with the Dutch medical community after Bart Huges - one of the PROVO leaders drilled a hole in his cranium (skull trepanation). Hughes believed that the membranes in his head expanded as a result of the extra space he had created, thus increasing the volume of blood -and in turn oxygen- that his brain could contain at any given time. The result, Hughes believed, was similar to the expanded consciousness achieved during yoga exercises, or an LSD trip, but in this case the benefits were permanent."

All the groups included in this book have similar motives to those of Bart Hughes, in the sense that they refuse to accept what conventional experts have to say. Perhaps this is what a true artist should be doing but I dunno. I'm much of a practical romantic these days. But I like fantastic stories even better. Which is why I've just read "Taliesin" and "Merlin" by Stephen Lawhead. ( Lion, 1988 both of them) a total of 958 pages of the destruction of Atlantis, Druids with strange powers, Maniac Picts and Christianity. Set in late Roman Britain and Dark age Britain, these reworkings of celtic myths and stories of King Arthur work surprisingly well and are recommended for anyone with similar taste (I can get enough of this sort of story. After the two chunky tomes above, I read "The Lord of the Rings") Very much the sword and sorcery novels for the 80's with carefully researched myths in place of, say, CS Lewis's free ranging fictions.

I am hard to please. "What?" you say. Well yes, or should I qualify: when it comes to the written word I am hard to please. After a few dreadful encounters, I ceased granting interviews, became considerably exercised at the proposal of a TV movie and once even threatened to sue Amnesty International if they didn't leave me alone.

All this stems from my fervent belief that if folks are going to address issues, they ought, at the minimum, recognize what those issues are. The issues are not the demeanor of judges, the nature or length of sentences, the recreational proclivities of prisoners, the sweet children at home or Juicy Fruit gum. The issues are the Bomb, personal responsibility and disarmament. We had better hope that these are the issues - publicly, because it's a matter of life and death; privately, because if not, a whole bunch of us have made some serious and costly mistakes.

And so it is that after 7 years of "Plowshares" disarmament actions, I have finally read something on the subject that pleases me. Anne Montgomery and Art Laffin have studiously avoided sensationalism, the cult of personality and fluff, focusing instead on the truth in a resistance primer which manages, at the same time, to be the final word (my humble opinion).

Need concise information on U.S. first-strike policy? Wonder about the legal basis of resistance? Curious about the diverse spiritual underpinnings of "Plowshares" actions and serious campaigns of nonviolence? Desire a better understanding of the prison witness? Want a list of communities, organizations and resources to further your inquiry and involvement? It's all here, as are action statements, legal briefs, poetry, reflections and photographs beautifully blended by the skillful editing.

Oh yes, there is a chronology and profile of the 18 Plowshares actions and 66 participants (Sept., 1980 - March, 1986; more have occurred since). It's brief and informative, and after you read it, you won't have the slightest idea what we eat for breakfast. Isn't that wonderful? Notice that I have not named the more than 25 contributors who run the gamut from famous to obscure. I would even omit reference to Laffin and Montgomery, who, depending upon the circles in which you travel, are famous or obscure, but you couldn't find the book if I did. My point is that if you're attracted chiefly by high visibility, you need to refocus, but if you're interested in a serious reflection on resistance by those living it, this is the book to buy.

I would be happy if no one ever again wrote a word about "Plowshares". Someone undoubtedly will, but I won't ask you to read it. I am asking that you spend a few hours with Swords Into Plowshares. Thanks, Anne and Art! You've pleased the toughest critic.

TAX

Imagine a system of taxation which halves the tax burden of the richest, shifts resources from the recession-struck North to the affluent South East, costs at least twice as much to collect as the rates, requires an army of investigators to trace people, disenfranchises the poorest and introduces a rebate system so complicated that few can understand it...........the poll tax.

The more you really look into it the more sinister every twist and turn. This whole issue needs good, clear campaigning - the sort which depends on street committees, local action and local support. Many people are going to be confused, some frightened, many determined to do something......if only they don't feel isolated. It's vital to learn from the Scottish experience (registration began there in April): despite widespread popular anti-Tory sentiment, information and local organisation came too late and sparsely to properly tap the potential that's there. As the powers that be keep a close eye on Scottish resistance (and made suitable adjustments) so should we who live in England and Wales. Obviously, the labour party isn't going to be the burning flame of resistance that we never thought it was going to be, so we'd better take things into our own hands.

"Pinch of Salt" readers take to the streets! Get in touch with your local anti-poll tax group, go leafletting, talk with your neighbours, display a poster in your window.......

Centres of Resistance is a network of Christians into public witness against Tory policies. They're now putting a lot into agitating for Christian Resistance to the poll tax, and are producing a poster for your window (Christians Say No To The Poll Tax). == Spot The Bishop Stop Spot The Bishop Stop Spot The End =========

"Pinch" enters the fantastically exciting world of competitions. OK, pen and papers ready, here's one I cooked in the studio beforehand:

The Bishop of London recently remarked that he wouldn't recognise a woman bishop (well she sure as hell wouldn't look like Robert Runcie): the mind boggles. Is the Anglican Church so hung up that its bishops aren't instructed in basic sex education? Or might he just need some new theological glasses. Anyway, here's the competition: below is a cut-out playing-card. With as many X's as you like place an X over the spot which you think most resembles an Anglican Bishops. Send all entries to: The Bishop of London, London, England.

The winner will receive a set of high-anglican-scented joss-sticks.

DIVINE

American hard-line born-again Christians have quite a job keeping Satan out from stuffin' their children's minds. Here's some wicked ways to play, through such popular toys as Masters of the Universe, the Smurfs, and Fisher Price's The Magic School Bus. The problem is that by the time you've eliminated the evils of amorality, occulism, or wizardry from the local toyshop, there isn't much left for the kids to play with.

But salvation is at hand. Wise Win Toys of Hasting, Z-2, have produced a range of ultra-Christian toys: there are the Christian Kids - Sinful Dills with Biblical clothes and how you've really come to love Christian board games with blessing and penances; plastic bible heroes and Princes of Peace Fets, a range of morally pure stuffed animals, with names like Born Again Bunny, Righteous Rabbit, Bodybuilding Boy, Holy Cow and Sanctified Squid.

Ken Richter, managing director of Wise Win, has Jesus Christ as the chairman of his board, and the company's chief executive officer is registered as The Holy Spirit.

Under this exalted leadership, the company has grossed a million dollars worth of business in its first year, so have plenty of cash for the Lord is right behind those who help themselves.

CHRIST: THE LAST TEMPTATION OF A movie

Well...wadda privilege...writin' Pinch's first movie review. Wadda good idea. Wadda racey topical mag, way ahead o' its time. Anyway, cut the crap, waddabout the movie?

Well...boy o' boy o' boy.

Wadda film. Wadda great film! Makes me wanna write pages and pages, full of graphic details and lotsa controversy (or as we say in the film biz, controvareusl). Well, waddaya say? More to the point, wadda I say?

This classic Hitchcock remake, with all the original cast...oh, hold on, wrong film. Sorry there readers...that's better. Wadda racey film...racey...raunchy...raunchy.

Wadda plot! Gripping...racey. Gripping plot. What...what castin'? Unbelievable. Meryl Streep...as Mary Mag...whadda imagination?...waddaacrease. Durt Reynolds as J.C. himself...well waddasay? None of this wispy Jesus of Nazareth starry-eyed drive. No folks. A real man Jesus. Big muscles. Big ambitions...bash...smash...kick those stalls over...attaboy...waddaman...

Boy o' boy o' boy...the sex scenes, eh?, eh? What paradigms of erotic sensibility?...hold on a minute...I should read: What paradigms of erotic sensibility?...just good ol' racey raunchy sex scenes...and then, J.C.'s old man barges in on the pair just...boy o' boy...well, no, actually, I haven't seen it all the way through yet...well, no, but I did see this chat show...and no, none of them had seen it all the way through...but, boy o' boy you sure as hell can pick up the sense of it, carn'tcha?...Well...waddasay? OK, next issue, I'll do a good one: Mary Poppins: a vehicle for radical class consciousness...no, seriously...waddaythink?

The Chancellor, just back from his summer holidays in Bermuda, writes a gripping account of finances:

"Well, I'm afraid I'll have to be austerity measures, higher interest rates and more (nonviolent) bank robberies. Last issue cost £270 to print and, all in all, £29.90 on postage, plus a bit of repayment of loans. We've received £251.78 in donations, demos, and bookstalls. Before going to the printers we have £252.81 in the account. We still owe £287, and this printing bill could be £300 plus postage. So we'll be a few hundred in the red (which is the usual scheme of things). "Pinch" relies totally on donations. Here are some ways you can help:

DONATIONS: cheques/postal orders payable to "A Pinch of Salt". Loose money sent at your peril, our joy.

STAMPS: Why not send us some stamps, preferably of the second-class variety, but penny black ads & welcome.

DOLLARS: Any spare Canadian, U.S. or Australian $'s in your pockets? Bung 'em in an envelope and sent them to us. therewith we can pass them on to mags and papers over there.

SISTERS AND BROTHERS!
BEWARE THE I.N.F. TREATY! STEP UP THE RESISTANCE!
NO AIR- LAUNCHED, NO SEA- LAUNCHED CRUISE!
NO TRIDENT!
GO FORTH! DESTROY MILITARISM (IN A SPIRIT OF PEACE AND RECONCILIATION)

It's not like the missileers at Missouri’s Whiteman Air Force Base hadn't been warned. The likeness of Godzilla himself had appeared inside the fence of silo C-2 earlier in the summer, complete with a warning to the Joint Chiefs of Staff:

"You may wonder why I have chosen to visit your missile compound instead of spending my vacation time terrorizing the Japanese Islands. As you know, I would be lying dormant underneath the Pacific Ocean were it not for your A-bomb and H-bomb testing. As is characteristic of your species, you have shown an amazing lack of respect for the planet you live on ... and they call me a monster!"

"And so, I have come to warn you that if you do not stop setting up these missiles that your mad scientists are creating, I will be forced to take drastic measures.

Early on the morning of August 15th, 14 people entered two Minuteman nuclear missile silo sites in western Missouri. After cutting through locks and scaling fences, some of the activists sat silently and prayed. Some planted trees, and others left crosses bearing the names of Central Americans who have died in regional conflicts. All the participants left personal artefacts at the sites, including World War II medals, family photographs, and children's poetry.
