Dear Aunt Peg,

Sorry I haven't written for so long, but you know how it is when one is in such demand. My social diary is in such a whirl at the moment, with the trade 'conventions' and such like, but I took time off the other day to go for a ride - on a steam train, you know. Not that I can ever remember them being in service - except for the time we were on the Orient Express, of course. Yes, that Lucinda girl was arrested in Istanbul, I seem to remember. It must have been those dreadful red stains all over that white chiffon number she bought from the Church bazaar. Mind you, I thought the Duchess of Swinnderby would never part with it - it's the only one she's got according to a close friend and I'm not one to gossip, but she first wore it at the Liberation Ball - yes, 1918 was a very good year.

Sorry to get side-tracked. Back to the story. Well, we climbed out of Marietta's white Rolls at Loughborough station and not a porter in sight - my baggage is usually so heavy, so it's a good job I left Joan at home. Anyway, it was two pounds for the ride (cheap at twice the price, considering the view) - such a pity I couldn't drag him away from his parent's; it was like Death in Venice.) I seem to remember that Marietta and Davinia missed the train- whatever went off in those Engine sheds I dread to think, but they did manage to stagger aboard the next train. Davinia's legs still seemed to be trembling; poor dear, the doctor's taken her off the gin, you know. Yes, lager from now on - make's her feel butch I suppose. Well, that's about it for now. Sorry I've got no gossip for you dear, except.... did you hear about Miss Bebbington's new outfit for the Pink Hippo Ball. We all had a sneak preview at the Potteries Ball last night, bu what were those white stains? That "well, I just happened to be painting the roof when...." excuse will not work with me dear.
