

Your Own Stuff Press was formed in Nottingham in the late 1970's to encourage ordinary people to write - and to publish their writings. The Press has been able to involve its writers in every aspect of the process of publication and to see publication in the broadest possible sense of the word. In 1982, Your Own Stuff Press joined the National Federation of Worker Writers and Community Publishers.

The Press has publications ranging from poems by a local black schoolgirl, to dialect poetry, to short stories. Nottingham Writers Workshop was started by the Press and meets weekly as well as producing several performances each year. Your Own Stuff Press provides writers to run local workshops as one-offs or on a longer term basis and will run sessions in schools and community centres. Nottingham Writers Workshop are available to run performances in similar venues.

The Rainbow Centre, at 180, Mansfield Road, is a resource centre for campaigning groups in the city. There is a shop, a library, meeting rooms, 'Veggies' vegetarian food co-operative, a paper recycling operation, pigeon hole service for groups and poster-banner design facilities.

The shop sells badges, stickers, postcards, second-hand clothes, plants, books, hand-made pottery, jewellery and candles, photographs and lots more!

The Library has books, journals, pamphlets and periodicals on the themes of peace, the environment, co-operation, world development, alternative technology, human and animal rights and similar issues. It is open for anyone to come in and do research, read up on a particular topic or just browse.

The Rainbow Centre also produces a bi-monthly listings of what is happening in Nottingham.

PEOPLE'S NOTTINGHAM

a DIRECTORY of CAMPAIGNING and 'ALTERNATIVE'
GROUPS in the CITY

Introduction

In the autumn of 1985 the Rainbow Centre opened as a focal point for campaigns associated with peace, our environment and human and animal rights. One of the original ideas was to produce a directory which would list the many organisations and groups who exist in the city of Nottingham, what they were trying to do and how people could join them. Fairly early on in this project, the Rainbow Centre met up with Your Own Stuff Press who had thought of producing a directory to alternative Nottingham along the lines of the Spare Rib diary with a mixture of useful information, pictures and items of local interest.

So Your Own Stuff Press and the Rainbow Centre decided to join together and produce a number of directories; on campaigning and community groups; of resource centres; on women's groups; and on places to recycle waste products. This is the first of these directories. Rainbow has, with the help of CODA, organised the actual listings, Your Own Stuff Press has written the items on people's history while both groups have encouraged people to send in artwork and poems for inclusion.

Inevitably this directory is not complete. We wrote to 200 groups and these 80 are the replies we received. There are probably other groups which we never managed to make contact with and who don't know about this directory. We made a decision not to include those groups which already feature in recent directories - like community centres, self-help groups, under 5's and Afro-Caribbean groups. However we have listed these other available guides.

We hope that this directory will become an annual publication, so if you feel that your group should be listed here or you know someone or something which should be included for next year's update, please fill in and return the specimen questionnaire at the back of the book before July 1987. We would also appreciate your comments on whether you find this directory useful and interesting. Offers of artwork, poems, items on local historical events and so on are also very welcome.

Happy reading! Val Harris, Wendy Whitfield.

Experiments with Worms.

cut them in two just above the thigh and humans do not reproduce
both halves die;
prove this yourself, take a human from the shelf.

Now here we have a vivisectionist, it's difficult to tell the sex of this because this species has no balls and very little conscience at all but for those of you still in doubt earlier we cut this ones' heart out still we're keeping it breathing on a cigarette machine no need to be squeamish its clinically clean and the end will justify the means vivisectionists have no feelings spray perfume in it's eyes;
sure it cries, but it never dies here have a try we've got to be cruel to be kind and we just might find some medical advance

Sometimes by chance you can be cutting up a specimen and suddenly from the mess therein you can make a great achievement, so we're all in agreement
we can feed tubes into it's brain and record the scale of pain as we burn acid through it's face it's for the good of the race
Let's make this world a better place.

Oral History

Born in South Wales in 1897, Harry Davies worked down the pit at Tyn Ewydd until the outbreak of the First World War when he joined the Royal Engineers. His class-consciousness developed rapidly during the war, especially after a 90 day period of imprisonment after being court-martialled for retaliating when struck by an officer!

At the end of the War, Harry continued his involvement with local politics, participating in struggles against coal-owners on behalf of the Miners' Federation. Of events leading up to and during the General Strike of 1926 Harry says:

"Under the Emergency Powers Act of 1926, if two of you were seen speaking together you were arrested and taken to the Police Station. I was taken in with some comrades on a Sunday morning - we were speaking. They fetched a coloured man in there and when we asked him what he was in for he said 'For preachin' the Gospel'. Afterwards, the door-latch opened and a parcel was pushed through with some cakes and things in and a voice said 'That's for your mothers' sakes'. That's how it was on one Sunday under the Emergency Powers Act.

"It's the same thing that's happening in South Africa now and it's a situation where the law is used in any way against the working people to suppress 'em to their ideas. Unemployment is a curse to any country and any government but unemployment is used by the rich so that they can keep the poor where they want 'em.

"They say there was a man in Nottingham coming up from the Meadows to sign on at the Labour Exchange at Castle Boulevard. And as he was crossing from the Midland Station to the canal bank to Lister Gate he saw a chap in the canal drowning, shouting 'Come and save me!' But he knew where the chap was working and he says 'Leave the buggar drown!' He went to the place where the man had worked and asked for his job and he said 'You've got a vacancy here, so and so drowned'. 'Oh,' he said, 'You've come too late, the bloke who pushed him in got it!'"

After the defeat of the 1926 General Strike, many militants in South Wales were denied work or were given only dangerous repair work to carry out. Of this period Harry says:

"I was injured in the pits after the 1926 strike. At that time there was 18 killed safenin' her up. Well, I was safenin' her up with two other lads and there was another fall. I got the lads out but it came anyway and caught my back and fractured my spine. I was off for six years. During this time I studied Common Law. The reason that I studied Common Law was to put up a fight for common justice for the widows of the miners that had been killed in accidents, against the coal-owners. And not only that. The Welsh coal-owners had the doctors in their pockets. The servants of the Welsh coal-owners would go to the widows offering bits of lumps of sums that was no good at all. What I used to do when they came to me: I'd send 'em to the Registrar and he'd settle the case for 'em in a proper way. From that period, all my working life has been spent working for the common good, amongst the unemployed and the trade unions.

Harry's first child, a daughter, died in 1931 at the age of two and a half, from malnutrition. On Easter Sunday 1933 her mother also died of a condition related to malnutrition. Harry moved to Nottingham in 1934.

"Well, I came to Nottingham first. I came from a poverty area but after being here a while I seen as much poverty nearly, here, as was there. More so in the Winter time when the poor little kids with rickets, in Narrowmarsh . . . the poverty of Narrowmarsh was beyond comprehension.

After his move to Nottingham, Harry continued to work for the 'common good'. He tried to establish trade unions, he worked within his own unions and fought for equal pay for women. At 89 he is still involved in local campaigns in Sneinton, where he now lives, and during these years Harry has found time to write poems, several novels including one called 'The Lean Years', childrens stories and articles.

Oral History

Harry Davies:

'The activities by the National Unemployed Workers of the 1930's in Nottingham was all to see that the kiddies and the women and the unemployed got what rights they had in them days; but they were very poor rights, and everything had to be fought for. One activity was to see that the unemployed was not used as cheap labour in different parts of the country. They used to send the unemployed from Nottingham to work for three months for the Forestry Commission, and just pay 'em about fifteen shillings a week whilst the wife and children would be looked after with a very, very small dole. We used to call 'em Slave Camps.

We would hold meetings and marches against the Means Test. We had a shop in Chesterfield Street, Nottingham. Underneath there was a joiner by the name of Ledger, and he used to make a coffin. On the coffin would be painted:

'He died of the Means Test - no Winter Relief.'

Well that coffin used to be carried right round Nottingham on a Saturday morning!

At Christmas time, we used to see that the kiddies had a decent Christmas dinner, and a bit of a present. The good people in Nottingham were Parr, the butcher; Marsdens, the grocers; Burton the grocer; the Co-Operative Society; and Tom King of Sneinton Market, the big fruiterer. These were some of the main people that supplied us with all the stuff the kiddies needed. Where Broad Marsh is now, we'd have about five hundred kids in the chapel there and they would all get a decent dinner and a bit of a present. They'd sing this bit of a song:

'Who puts kiddies on the UAB?
Who starves kiddies on the UAB?
Who wants war because they long to see
Sweat and profit out of you and me.'

(UAB - Unemployment Assistance Board)

Then the Unemployed man, after he'd been dismissed from work, would get no dole when he'd been charged with misconduct or something like that. Them cases had to be fought for in the Castle Boulevard Labour Exchange, in the Courts of Referees. Then there were tribunals in Westminster Buildings, Parliament Street; the Unemployment Assistance Board; the Means Test people and then the Public Assistance Committee in the Council House - the old Parish Relief! In the old days, a person could be charged with not genuinely seeking work, it had to be proved that they were genuinely seeking work!

SO PRETTY.

I do not believe that an outside Power controls the happiness of my Life although I have lived in a Prison with a free heart.

My world is alluring and beautiful, Free and intelligent, gay and dreamy, And honest. I was a rebel against the Exploitation and brainless unbearable Snobbery of the rich.

I was highly sensitive and passionate, By nature knowing what love can do, After the pangs and joys I had Been through - the hope and the hopeless.

Sometimes I felt alone as if hidden in An unknown region. Are we to pass by Life, as the snow, without any real meaning? What is there more beautiful in Life than To see, than man or woman lullabying a child To sweet sleep? There never was a flowering Rose-bush so pretty.

LOVE OF BROTHERHOOD.

Those who deny love and pleasure, to see
Human suffering from distant eyes of statues
As silent as death, as one chapter of life Closes to open another, tying the mind in Knots, as shallower the water bigger the Splash, as some memories of youth stored
Away and forgotten, as the sun splinters
Into flecks of gold and the wind wrinkles
The surface of water moving in patches;
As the centre of life on times shines Brilliantly in clear and honest eyes, and The truth becomes light to bear when
The disorder of the beautiful finds Itself in the love of brotherhood.

Harry Davis.

VULGAR AMBITION

Workers do not want education in order
To become technically better for higher Wages. They don't want it that they may Rise out of their own class, always a Vulgar ambition. They want it because That in the treasures of the mind they Find an aid to good citizenship and a Source of pure enjoyment and a repose
From the unnecessary hardships of life
In the midst of clanging machinery and Noise -- our hideous cities to toil.

Burning of the Castle: 1831

All combinations (or Trade Unions) of workmen were made illegal by the Combination Act of 1799. The trade union of the local hosiery trade, the Associated Stockingers, had been suppressed in 1779. There was a remnant of this combination, the Nottingham Frameworkers and Knitters Association, which was permitted to meet by the government but was very moderate and had no clout whatsoever.

By 1811 there had been a decade of war with France, and coupled with this was a 20% increase in the population of Nottingham; bread shortages and corn riots; curtailed foreign markets and high food prices through unemployment. People became desperate. Some showed their desperation by smashing frames of master hosiers with sledge hammers or by burning them. Local activists became known as Luddites because they often announced their intentions through warning notices signed Ned Ludd. In 1812 the government brought in a punitive Bill against Framebreakers, making their crimes punishable by death, whereas the previous penalty had been transportation.

In 1831, the long-awaited Reform Bill was drafted: (*)

"The Reform Bill was at this time greatly agitating the public mind. It was the talk by day and the dream by night of the great bulk of the people and for some weeks past all tidings respecting it had been received with the most enthusiastic interest.

The Michaelmas or Goose Fair had attracted to the town an unusually large number of strangers, amongst whom were a considerable body of evil-disposed persons. These characters ripe for mischief needed but a solitary pretence to induce the ignorant and unreflecting of the Reformers to join them in the commission of acts of devastation and plunder and unfortunately, the obstinacy of the House of Lords too soon gave them the alluring incentive.

Pickford's van arrived in the town at half-past-eight in the evening of Saturday 8th. with the intelligence that the Bill had been rejected in the Lords. In little more than an hour, no less than nineteen requisitions from different parties were forwarded to the Mayor calling for him to convene a public meeting on the subject.

On the morning of the Sunday, hundreds of people assembled in front of the Post Office on High Street and before the White Lion Hotel awaiting the arrival of the mail. On the coach driving up either a passenger or the guard said that in London The Reformers were beating to arms, and the announcement was received with loud cheers."

On the following Monday an organised group of people went to the Forest where a mill was destroyed. At Notintone Place, Colwick, railings were torn down and used as weapons. At Colwick Hall, Mrs. Masters (Mary Chatwick, Byron's first love), her daughters and a friend had to hide in the shrubbery whilst the Hall was pillaged and burnt. The group returned to Nottingham and divided into two. One group tried to release prisoners from the House of Correction whilst the others succeeded in entering the Castle which was then pillaged and burned down. On Tuesday, a silk mill at Beeston was burnt and Wollaton Hall was attacked. Troops were assembled there, prisoners were taken, and the riots came to an end.

Poems by the Banana Poets:

Let's shell out seventeen fifty
To see Torvill and Dean
While they skate round the rink
Like a king with his queen
When people are starving
Or can't get a job
Let's waste tax payers' money
And build a tent that is grand
It could go on the Forest
And blend in with the land
Let's forget about famine
And the nasty things that go on
We can watch Torvill and Dean
When they drop the H bomb
So when you sit in that tent
I hope your consciences are clear
'cos people are hungry
But they ain't f.....g here!

Blessed are the pure of heart for they shall be trodden underfoot

Rory fights the system
he's a prisoner of war
but denies he's a victim bites the hand that's seen to feed the hand that signs for guns in the name of peace the hand that draws the line across the refugee says Income Tax nails the soldiers boots blood money fuels the tanks

whilst the men in the Burtons suits
are laughing
laughing all the way to the bank.

Rory trips your anger with his smile disarms you with his lifestyle
plans to stop the city with ideas for a clash L.P.
Billy Bragg and New Model Army

his battleground is your personal views where you shoot him down as a crank
whilst the men in the Burtons suits
are laughing
laughing all the way to the Bank

you say Rory's dreams are built on sand he's a foot soldier in no-mans land
a cliché casualty
a sheep to the slaughter
a moth to a candle
a fish out of water trying to compete with the nine o'clock news civic pride and the vote of thanks
whilst the men in the Burtons suits
are laughing
laughing all the way to the Bank

The sad thing is he really believes the world could change you say apart from that he's fairly sane.

Fallacy of the Lower Middle Class.

And on the 8th day, God created the lower middle class and he spoke saying take from these Terraced slums my working class people that they may settle in the new promised land we shall call council estates and give unto them extended credit facilities with no deposit and whole manner of consumer goods. Let them purchase venetian blinds, electric door bells which play ten much loved tunes and go forth to Spain for their holiday of a lifetime bringing back a 3ft. donkey and some genuine reproduction maracas.

Let them install fitted carpets, central heating and Japanese hi-fi systems in their abode. Surround them with images of style and culture that they may dwell in their illusion.

And unto them furnish sons and daughters that they may grow strong in their pretensions and flee from these places calles council estates saying:-

"Get behind me thee social stigma" and let these sons and daughters visit tasteful restaurants for evening meals and let them buy basket work and matching pine from arty shops that charge outrageous prices and let these sons and daughters read their Daily Mail and go out in foursomes to the local lounge and talk about loft insulation, patio doors and stone fireplaces and never, never, call these people working class for these are to be termed the lower middle class for verily the term working class is to be cast from this land for ever and ever.

AMEN.

Oral History

Chilwell Disaster 1918.

Conversation with a woman born in 1902.
(Oral History Collection).

"I remember Chilwell being built in the 1914 war . . . and then that explosion! I'd just got off the train when I heard it go. And oh! It did go loud!

Well then me and another woman went down to the gates, to Chilwell gates, and we seen 'em all coming out. Well, the people what lived there they got bowls of water and everything; and them what could walk out - what wan't seriously injured - and they was bleedin', or anythin' like that, these used to bathe it for them. And then there was a policeman stoppin' cars to help, as well as the ambulance, to take all these what was seriously wounded to hospital. And then there was a lot, oh a lot of people what they couldn't recognise because they'd got limbs blown off and everything. So what they done, when they made coffins, they just put 'em in the coffins and then they buried 'em all in one grave at Attenborough Cemetary there".

General Ludd's Triumph - to the tune of 'Poor Jack'.

Chant no more your old rhymes about bold Robin Hood
His feats I but little admire
I will sing the Achievements of General Ludd
Now the hero of Nottinghamshire
Brave Ludd was to measures of violence unused
Till his sufferings became so severe
That at last to defend his own Interest he rous'd
And for the great work did prepare.

Now by force unsubdued, and by threats undismay'd
Death itself can't his ardour repress
The presence of Armies can't make him afraid
Nor impede his career of success
Whilst the news of his conquests is spread far and near How his Enemies take the alarm
His courage, his fortitude, strikes them with fear
For they dread his Omnipotent arm.

The guilty may fear but no vengeance he aims
At the honest man's life or Estate
His wrath is entirely confided to wide frames
And to those that old prices abate
These Engines of mischief were sentenced to die
By unanimous vote of the Trade
And Ludd who can all opposition defy
Was the grand Executioner made.

And when in the work of destruction employed
He himself to no method confines
By fire and by water he gets them destroyed
For the Elements aid his designs
Whether guarded by Soldiers along the Highway
Or closely secured in the room
He shivers them up both by night and by day
And nothing can soften their doom.

He may censure great Ludd's disrespect for the Laws
Who ne'er for a moment reflects
That Cool Imposition alone was the cause
Which produce these unhappy effects.
Let the haughty no longer the humble oppress
Then shall Ludd sheath his conquering Sword
His grievances instantly meet with redress
Then peace will be quickly restored.

Let the wise and the great lend their aid and advice
Nor ever their assistance withdraw Till full fashioned work at the old fashioned price
Is established by Custom and Law
Then the Trade when this ardorous contest is o'er Shall raise in full splendour its head
And colting and cutting and squaring no more Shall deprive honest workmen of bread.

Oral History

Lionel Jacobs: At 73, still working as a tailor in the centre of Nottingham, has been active in the Trade Union and Labour Movement all his life. Born in London, he took part in the fight against facism in Spain, fighting with the British Battalion of the International Brigade. When Lionel came out of the Army in 1946 he moved to Nottingham.

Francro's Jails:

"We went to Spain because it was anti-facist. We'd been fighting all the time: been in the battles of Cable Street, London, and other places, and it was a very natural development. Young people those days were very militant, they'd nothing to lose; bad unemployment, rotten conditions.

Now talking about Franco's prisons - I got captured! I shall never forget the date; it was March 31st, 1938. I remember, because the thought always crosses my mind that if I'd got captured the next day, it would have been April Fools' Day! And we were fools, because we got captured!

I was a Political Commissar, which was a political officer. He was responsible for maintaining morale, keeping spirits up, explaining events as they occurred. The saying of the Political Commissars was, "First to advance, Last to retreat!" You had to be in the forefront of everything.

Their object was to break our spirit and our object was to defeat 'em. When we first got captured, they'd issued leaflets to the Brigade, called upon the British Battalion to desert, promised all sorts of things. When we first got captured, they published throughout the World Press, reports that the British Battalion of the International Brigade had deserted. Then they got us in a prison and gave us instructions what we were supposed to do. We was to shout the Fascist slogan when they gave us the command "Viva Franco!" We weren't going to have it. So myself and another colleague said through an interpreter that we weren't going to have it, and immediately there was a terrific uproar, because a lot of our older chaps thought we were going to get shot. They said, "You'll get us all shot!", but the chap that was questioning us took that as a protest about not doing the Fascist salute. So we had a long argument with him and in the end we agreed on a compromise: we'd give the Fascist salute, we'd give the British Salute and then we'd shout Viva Franco, but we never shouted that; half of us shouted 'Viva Blanco' and the other half shouted 'F___ you'.

The conditions in prison were what you'd expect of that sort of thing. Got a diet which was a couple of bread rolls, a bowl of soup, I never touched it the whole time I was there. Midday and evening, a bowl of beans or something like that. Very hard to survive; but we managed alright.

Of course our main interest was in maintaining morale so we organised classes - I taught Working Class History, Jack Jones taught Philosophy. We organised concerts, that did a great deal to maintain morale. There were about 700 in the prison itself, and of these about 150 were British, the rest were Americans, Germans, French Canadians and one or two Italians and Balkans. The funny thing was, they normally took no prisoners!

Eventually some of the chaps got exchanged for Italian prisoners: about half of us, the rest of us stayed until about February 1939 and then they exchanged us: one of us for ten Italians! The prison we were at then was San Sebastian right on the front, on the beach. In the yard you could see the bullet marks with the bloodstains running down where the republican prisoners were shot and executed. When anybody was being shot, they would shout 'Long live the Republic! Down with Facism!'"

Luddite verse, posted in Nottingham on Saturday morning, May 9th. 1812.

Welcome Ned Ludd, your case is good
Make Perceval your aim;
For by the Bill 'tis understood
It's Death to break a Frame -

With Dexterous skill, the Hosiers kill
For they are quite as bad;
And die you must, by the late Bill,
Go on my bonny Lad! -

You might as well be hung for death
As breaking a machine -
So now my lad, your sword unsheath
And make it sharp and keen -
We are ready now your cause to join Whenever you may call;
So make foul blood run clear and fine
Of Tyrants great and small! -

*Deface this who dare
They shall have Tyrants' fare
For Ned is every where An can see and hear.*
