

SMASH THE UNION!

Ever since the boss class joined Scotland to England and Wales, the Union has only served their interests. It has unified their power against the working class both in offshore Europe and throughout their reign of terror in Africa, India, Australia, Canada and other corners of the world where the Union Jack has been raised over the piles of corpses of "restless natives".

While smug brits on the Tory right talk of the barbarous Germans and the Nazi death camps, let us not forget that British brutality and genocide can readily match that of Belsen and Treblinka — just think of the slave ships, the complete and utter genocide of Tasmanians, many of whom were shot for sport. While pro-german Nazis deny the existence of Gas Chambers, racist scum like the Anti-Nazi League use British jingoism to cover their leftist nationalism. They simply follow an anti-german national interest with an ideology based on Imperial-liberalism. They gloss over the willful bombing and machine gunning of civilians by the RAF during the Second Imperialist World War. They apologise for mass murder with the old christian lie of a 'just war'.

The world cannot sleep easily while the British state still exists. We must smash the Union as the first step to eradicating all forms of nationalism. We must also resist integration into the European Community, which is just the concoction of another gang of bandits hoping to fleece the workers.

GERMAN UNITY MEANS THE BREAK UP OF GREAT BRITAIN

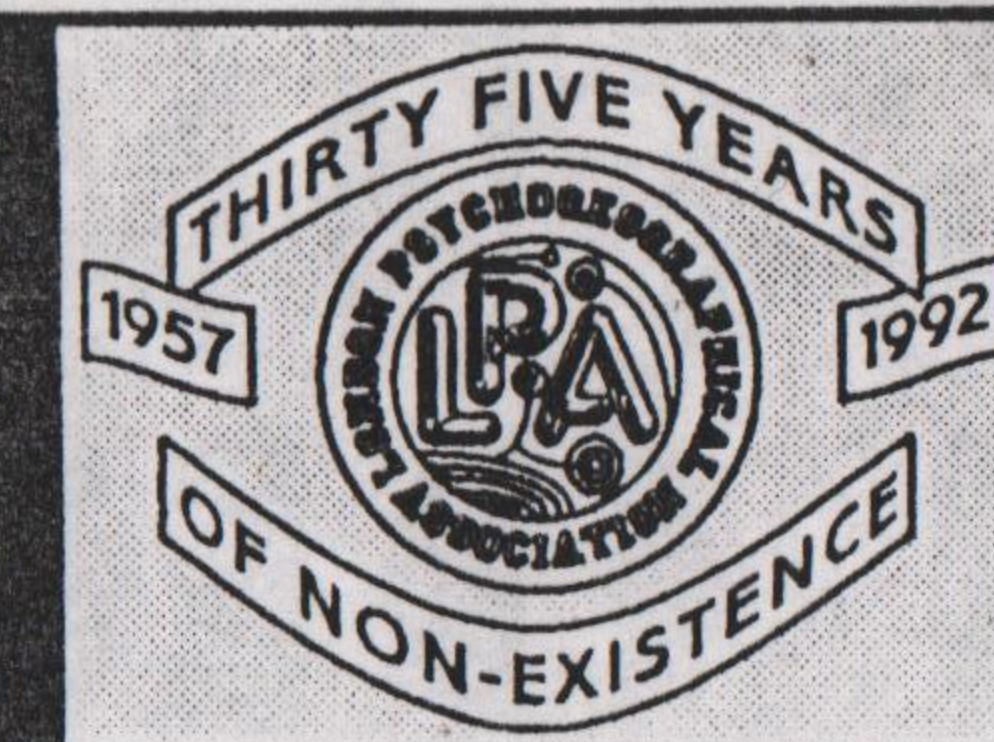

You don't have to be a professor of political science to work out that the biggest spur to Scottish 'independence' has been the re-unification of Europe around Germany. Not for nothing did the Easter Insurgents of 1916 in Dublin raise the slogan "Neither King nor Kaiser". The partition of Germany, like the partition of Ireland, served British Imperial ends. Soon Ireland will be re-unified and Great Britain partitioned. It is irrelevant whether these partitions are along national lines, or regional, as the proposed split of England into Mercia (North England), Daffon (the West Country) and Anglia (the South East).

Address to the Anarchist Summer School, Glasgow, 29th-31st May 1993

Open Creation and its Enemies out soon!

This summer a previously untranslated text by Asger Jorn will be published. Open Creation and its Enemies first appeared in the fifth issue of the Situationist Internationale journal in 1960.

Following Asger Jorn's death on May 1st, 1973, his friends organised a commemoration for the Summer Solstice travelling by boat as the Jazz band played and the Danish Solstice fires burned.

Our publishers Unpopular Books will be organising a book launch twenty years later, to be held on the Summer Solstice, 1993 at Callanais (Callanish) on the Isle of Lewis in the Outer Hebrides. All those attending this Summer school are duly invited to attend.

Greetings to those attending the Anarchist Summer School, celebrating 100 years of Class War in Glasgow.

The London Psychogeographical Association is contributing towards the event by organising a three-sided soccer match in nearby Queen's Park.

As most people are aware, football is dominated by the rich and powerful. It was in 1848 at Cambridge University that the rules were first written down. Fifteen years later the Football Association was set up at the Freemason's Tavern in Lincoln's Inn Fields, London.

The F.A. council is comprised of the aristocracy, senior representatives of the major armed forces and others of that ilk. Most players are drawn from the working class, although the high wages now received by top players make it a more interesting career amongst the middle class.

The bulk of supporters are working class, but as a sport with a strong element of male bonding involved it serves as a bridge to diffuse class antagonisms. Revolts against the soccer board rooms are usually limited attacks on mismanagement, rather than a more fundamental attack against football as a means of social control.

In 1966 Asger Jorn proposed three-sided football in his book The Order of Nature (Die Ordnung der Natur). This was part of a tripartite schema he called triolectics. Three teams would play, each defending its own goal. A record is kept of the goals which each side concedes. The flow of the game is enlivened by both strategic and tactical decisions and diplomacy.

Jorn was quite open when he proposed three sided football as a method of making certain concepts clear in a way which could not be conveyed by words.

Implicit in this was the indication that the ruling elite has manipulated football to induce a two-sided way of thinking amongst the working class. A similar two-sided approach can be seen in parliamentary debates.

The match will be played in Queen's Park, which is the site of the capture of Mary Stuart, erstwhile Queen of France and Scotland and heir to the English Throne. Before the game commences, the ball shall be crowned thrice, once for each of these countries, which shall also be the titles given to each of the teams. This also reflects the current layout of the gardens at Edzell Castle, hallowed turf for freemasonry.

During a recent LPA visit to Edzell the Scottish Football Association idiosyncronically staged an Under 21s match between Scotland and their old rivals Malta. Ever since the wars of the seventeenth century relations between the freemasons and Knights of Malta have been up and down. Nevertheless, children were taken from the village of Edzell to see the young Maltese team beaten in Dundee.

Association Football was introduced into Malta in 1886 a full nineteen years after the first Scottish club was set up. On Feb. 17th a full world cup qualifying match was played between the old sparring partners at Ibrox. Ally McCoist scored twice and Pat Nevin once.

We hope you will join us in this exercise which should stimulate both the body and the mind after a stuffy day indoors. We shall be using a leather neoplatonic 32 sided ball.

SCOTLAND FOREVER

Ever since the court of James VI migrated south, certain areas of East London have been an integral part of Scotland. James VI built the notorious Queen Anne House in Greenwich. Some of his courtiers settled just across the river in nearby Poplar.

This corner of a foreign field at one stage fell under the control of the evil East India Company, architects of the British Empire. However, by the mid-nineteenth century it was in the hands of a farmer by the name of McIntosh. In this rich dust, a richer dust lay concealed — the gold dust of the rack-rentier — a dust whom Scotland bore, shaped, made aware. He developed the McIntosh estate.

many areas of Scotland, the shape of this Scottish enclave obviously represents the dog head variant visible on stone 5 at Rhynie, Aberdeen. Clearly this site is as important as the Ongar Zodiac (Essex) or indeed the Glastonbury Bear discovered by Richard Muir (Riddles in the British Landscape, Thames & Hudson 1981).

Some people may scoff at such an idea, saying that the outline looks as much like My Little Pony as anything else. Some may treat this notion as ridiculous as the ideas of the Fleet Street editor Comyns Beaumont who wrote identified Edinburgh as Jerusalem, Dumbarton as Athens, and Ben Nevis as Mount Olympus. But this would be to forget that Beaumont was driven by his racist doctrines.

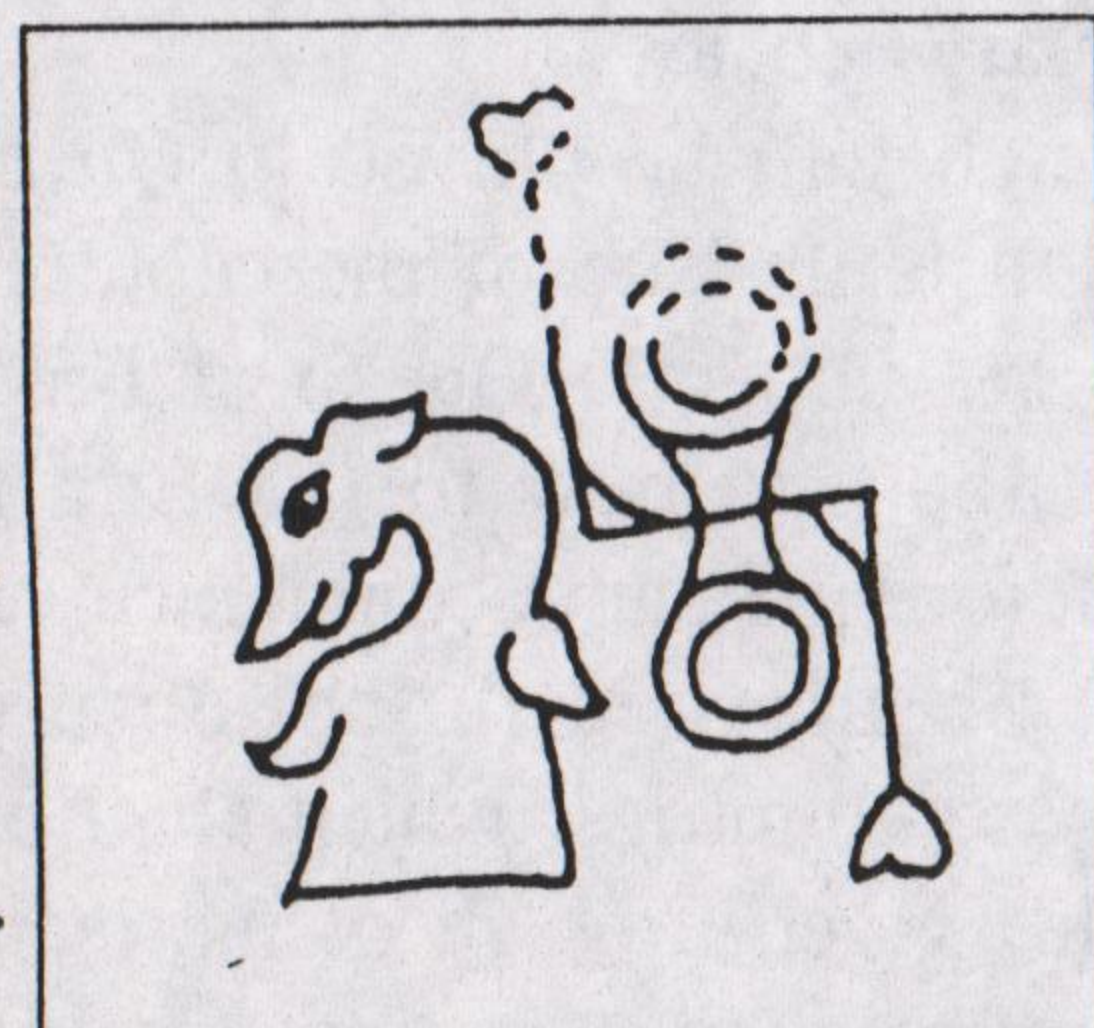

He wanted to prove that the British Isles were the cradle of the Aryan race, the supposed fountain head of all civilisation. He developed a conspiracy theory whereby Constantine, the Christian Roman emperor 'from Yorkshire', destroyed key historic texts.

But compared to these silly ravings of a right wing nutcase, the discoveries of the LPA are clearly the product of the most refined scientific techniques. They have revealed "a pulse in the eternal mind, no less", breathing Scottish air under a Scottish heaven.

Similar researches in other parts of the East End have thrown up a Presbyterian church on the Isle of Dogs built by Scottish engineers, and the extension to the British Sailors Society hostel, opened by Marchioness of Linlithgow, President of the Ladies Guild for Scotland in 1932. It is still a hotly debated question amongst the LPA as to whether the IVth Conference of the Situationniste Internationale (24th-28th September, 1960) was held in the main part of this institution or in fact in the extension.

These two premises are in exact alignment with the graveyard of St. Nicholas's church, Deptford where Christopher Marlowe met his death on May 30th, 1593, exactly 400 years ago. There is evidence he was murdered by the Christians for his forthright atheism.

Pictish engraving from Rhynie Stone No. 5, Aberdeen.

The terraces "stretched out in an endless procession, as alike as peas in a pod, with no individuality whatsoever. Each front window was draped with lace curtains looped back sufficiently to reveal an aspidistra in an art pot bravely facing whatever light might penetrate the dark interior of the parlour, made still more dark by the venetian blinds... Each front door was exactly like its neighbour. The street was deadly monotonous in appearance." (E.M. Page in East London Papers). Four miles of street frontage were blessed with a near complete alphabet of street names sharing a Scottish theme, from Aisle Street to Zetland Street.

Our accompanying map shows this sector of Hither Scotland before the Department of Transport partitioned the area with the Blackwall Tunnel Approach Road. This was part of their policy of using major roads to fragment communities and destroy archaic geograms.
